Baseball season has finally arrived, and there's no better place to catch a game than Fenway Park.

While the iconic Boston ballpark may be the oldest in Major League Baseball, the home of the Red Sox always has a few additions to check out each season, especially when it comes to the food. Fans will get the chance to feast on a variety of new concessions in 2018, so make sure to head to the park hungry this year.

Aramark senior executive chef Rob Abell is bringing a ton of bold flavors to Fenway this season, with several locally-inspired menu items. Seafood lovers will have plenty of new dishes to choose from, including lobster nachos, fried lobster mac and cheese balls and crab rolls, all featuring crustaceans from Yankee Lobster Co.

Fans will also be able to chow down on several meaty items courtesy of Savenor's, including meatball subs, pulled chicken tacos and cheesesteaks. Fenway taters featuring Cavendish Farms tater tots topped with bacon, sour cream and chives has been added to the menu as well.

On the sweeter side of things, the ballpark is now offering "Jane Dough" gourmet cookie dough, which will be available with or without toppings. And for fans who want a gameday brunch, creme brulee French toast topped with chocolate ganache, Vermont maple syrup and Fenway Farm's strawberry sauce will be on the menu at the Royal Roosters Club on Patriots' Day and at select day games.

Other food highlights for 2018 include specialty pizzas, which will be sold at all Regina's Pizzera locations throughout the venue, as well as an array of hot offerings like chili and clam chowder, which will be sold at the ice cream stands throughout the month of April.

Fenway Park isn't just stepping up its concessions game as several new seating areas will feature their own food and drink twists.

In partnership with Sam Adams, the right field roof deck is now home to the Sam Deck, featuring a new bar and lounge area. Sam Boston Lager, Sam '76, Rebel IPA and more styles will be available for purchase, as well as Sam Adams-inspired food items like beer marinated prime steak tips and Sam Adams-infused beef chili.

The 3rd Base Saloon has also been converted into Sammy's on 3rd, a recently renovated bar area with an extensive list of craft beer offerings.

Last but certainly not least is the new Jim Beam Dugout located along the first base line. The new field level seating area can accommodate groups of up to 25 people. Guests who try out the new seats will also receive a pregame meal at the Royal Roosters Club, a tour of Fenway, plus in-seat food and drink service.

5 Ways to celebrate National Beer Day

Sip some brews in honor of the holiday this weekend. MATT JUUL

As if people needed another reason to enjoy a few brews, National Beer Day is back on April 7. The annual holiday commemorates the end of Prohibition in America thanks to the Cullen–Harrison Act, which was signed into law by President Franklin D. Roosevelt in 1933. If you're in need of some ideas to honor the occasion, here are five ways to celebrate National Beer Day around the Boston area this weekend.

Branch Line
Celebrate National Beer Day all weekend long over at the Watertown eatery. Branch Line boasts and impressive list of 20 different kinds on brews on tap, including selections from Omnipollo, Grimm and Schilling. Beer buyer Magellan Casto always has a variety of fan-favorite and hard-to-find beers on the menu, so there's usually something for any kind of brew fan.
321 Arsenal St., Watertown, branchlinearsenal.com

Dorchester Brewing Co.
The brewery has a few fun events happening on Saturday, just in time for National Beer Day. Las Palmas is bringing some tasty bites to the tap room during a special pop-up beginning at 2 p.m., while Tap & Snap will be on hand beginning at 8 p.m. to shoot, edit and frame your favorite beer pictures. If you're looking for a quick workout before the drinking begins, stop by at 10:15 a.m. for a yoga class, which comes with two complimentary brews. Dorchester Brewing Co. will also have tours available on Saturday beginning at noon.

Narragansett
If you want to try a new brew this weekend, pick up a pack of Narragansett's Fresh Catch. The New England brewery's latest offering is a special blonde ale that pays tribute to the region's fishing tradition. The citrus infused brew pairs well with seafood and features notes of passionfruit and grapefruit.
Various locations, narragansettbeer.com

Sam Adams
While the beloved Boston brewery doesn't have anything specific happening in honor of the holiday, that doesn't mean you can't celebrate National Beer Day at Sam Adams' new tap room. Stop by for a flight after taking a tour this weekend.

Sip & Slide Party
Let the fun continue on Sunday, April 8, when Post 390's annual food and beer bash returns with another amazing lineup of New England breweries. Jack's Abby, Notch, Lamplighter Brewing Co., Berkshire Brewing, Two Roads, Harpoon and Bantam Cider will be bringing the brews, which will be paired with sliders crafted by Post 390 executive chef Nick Deutemeyer. Along with enjoying beer and food combos, guests will also have the chance to win some prizes.

Everything you need to know for PAX East 2018

The four-day gaming fest is back in town this weekend. MATT JUUL

More than 80,000 gamers will descend upon the Boston Convention and Exhibition Center this weekend for PAX East 2018.

The annual event, which kicks off on Thursday, is a multiday celebration of everything that has to do with gaming culture, from tabletop to arcade and video games. Now in its ninth year, PAX East has expanded into a four-day affair for 2018 to help accommodate the always growing number of fans who'll be in attendance.

This weekend's festivities are actually just one of several under the PAX umbrella, which originally launched in 2004 under the name Penny Arcade Expo in Washington before expanding to other cities. Director of Events Ryan Hartman tells Metro that the Boston fest has quickly become the largest event for the PAX team.

"It's not an easy thing to grow a show to this size," Hartman says. "We love Boston and Boston has embraced this show."'

PAX East is back.

For people who haven't attended a PAX event before, Hartman describes it as a true celebration of all things gaming and is basically a "party" for fans and members of the industry. Many gamers from across the country save up each year to make the trek to the Hub in order to meet with friends they usually only get to hang out with online.

"Our unwritten motto is 'welcome home,' and that's an idea that encapsulates what we do," Hartman says. "There are a lot of people who save up all year and then they make pilgrimages to the show. This is their Disney trip."

And like Disney, there's always a ton of fun stuff going on to keep attendees entertained throughout the weekend.

Guests who want to get their game on can take part in tournaments or sit back and watch the pros do their thing. Free play areas will be available as well for console, PC, virtual reality and tabletop fans, while a lounge area has been set aside for handheld games. Other highlights include panels, nightly concerts, an exhibit hall and even an appearance by Major League Soccer, which should delight esports and "FIFA" fans.

Attendees will also get the chance to take part in the Omegathon — a competition that occurs in the background of the show. Anyone who buys a ticket and checks the appropriate box will be considered for the Omegathon, which will feature 20 randomly selected fans who'll take part in different challenges and secret games for an opportunity to win a trip to any future PAX event around the world.

A political scandal that trumps today's. ALL PHOTOS BY CLAIRE FOLGER / ENTERTAINMENT STUDIOS

Jason Clarke plays Ted Kennedy in "Chappaquiddick."

'Chappaquiddick' star compares Ted Kennedy to Homer Simpson

Actor Jason Clarke and director John Curran discuss tackling the late senator's complicated legacy.

MATT JUUL

"Chappaquiddick" attempts to peel back the many layers of Ted Kennedy, offering an intimate look into the mind and soul of the late senator as he dealt with his infamous 1969 scandal.

The movie offers a far from flattering portrayal of the Boston-born politician, who often comes across on screen as cold, hubristic and even bumbling. While there are moments where Kennedy, played by Jason Clarke, seems genuinely remorseful over his role in the death of Mary Jo Kopechne (Kate Mara), those are overshadowed by the many instances in the film where his naked ambition appear to trump his sense of morality.

Beyond his fears of hurting his career and family name, Kennedy's sheer ineptitude over making decisions is showcased, like in the scene where he tries (and fails) to curry people's sympathies by wearing a fake neck brace to Kopechne's funeral. When you watch moments like this, it's easy to see how Clarke felt like a cartoon character at times.

"I joked early on that there's a bit of Homer Simpson in Ted," Clarke tells Metro. "There's a bit of Homer Simpson in all of us, really."

As director John Curran notes, though, the film isn't a "one-dimensional hit piece" on Kennedy, but rather a portrait of that takes a deep dive into his thought process as he dealt with the aftermath of Kopechne's death. The filmmaker praises the screenplay as a "fair and balanced look" at the tragedy.

"It felt like the opposite of the usual Kennedy story," Curran says. "Still a damning portrait, but I thought the way they handled it was a pretty exciting opportunity."

Considering Kennedy's later work as a champion on issues like civil rights, education and health, Curran felt conflicted working on this project. However, he admits that the stain of what happened in Chappaquiddick can never be erased.

"He had an incredible second act," Curran says. "That doesn't happen very often for politicians that come through something like this."

Thanks to the rise of Donald Trump, the world of politics has changed dramatically since the Chappaquiddick incident. While Curran believes that the media would be "a feeding frenzy" if this scandal happened to Kennedy today, it's hard to say whether it would've completely curtailed his presidential aspirations.

What it comes down to is the power of bases and its members being willing to amplify or overlook a candidate's faults depending on where they fall on the political spectrum.

"When [Trump] said that 'I can shoot someone on Fifth Ave.,' for us, it was shocking," Curran says. "I think his base would support him. What he's finally revealed is that it's like Boston Red Sox fans vs. Yankees fans – there's nothing that's going to make you become a Yankees fan if you live in Boston and vice versa."

Clarke believes that this partisan approach has framed how people look back on Kennedy's legacy and his actions in Chappaquiddick.

"History's still coming down on this and there's no way to look at it as if those choices were good," he says.

"Chappaquiddick" opens in theaters April 6.

Meet Ben Kilham, New England's 'bear whisperer'

The wildlife expert brings his knowledge to China in the new film "Pandas." MATT JUUL

Ben Kilham is New England's go-to bear expert. ALL PHOTOS BY DREW FELLMAN / WARNER BROS.

Ben Kilham has spent the better part of the last two decades helping orphaned black bears find their wild sides.

The author and wildlife expert has raised more than 100 cubs over the years through the Kilham Bear Center, teaching them the skills they need to re-enter the forests of New Hampshire. Kilham's ability to form long-lasting bonds with these creatures through his groundbreaking method has earned him the title of New England's "bear whisperer," while some affectionately call him "papa bear."

Kilham's work recently caught the eyes of researchers in China, who wanted to see if they could apply his system to helping struggling giant pandas reintegrate into the wild. The collaboration is subject of the new documentary "Pandas," which opens at the New England Aquarium's Simons IMAX Theater on April 6.

Narrated by Kristen Bell, the film takes audiences on a globe-spanning journey from New Hampshire to China's Chengdu Panda Base, where Kilham's method is put to the test with a panda named Qian Qian. Viewers get to see all the ups and downs as the cute critter is reintroduced into the mountains of Sichuan.

"Pandas" opens April 6.

Ahead, Kilham opens up about the successes and challenges of the project, his concerns for the future of pandas and more.

What are the major similarities between black bears and pandas?
They're both raised by their mothers. They both have long juvenile periods. They both follow their mother to learn and she gives them a protected environment where they have the opportunity to learn by themselves. [Pandas] don't travel, they don't move. Black bears are the same. So we just become the mother and provide that protected environment.

What were the challenges of working on this project?
The challenges weren't with the pandas, the challenge was working with a different culture. When I did my work with black bears, nobody cared. Nobody's interested in black bear cubs. I was the first one to rehabilitate them in most of New England and nobody looked over my shoulder, so I just did my thing. I solved all my problems and I could move forward very quickly. In China, they're the national icon. They're an ambassador for goodwill for the government, so the president of China and all the politicians, all the way down to our project, have something to say. That's what makes it complicated.

Do you view the project as a success so far?
It's definitely a success and, despite the challenges of working with so many people involved, too many cooks so to speak, it will be a success. We're going to learn a lot about what the panda needs to survive. There's challenges with climate. The pandas can only live in a temperate band and, if it gets too hot, they can't survive as the climate changes. Where they live on the mountains will change, so they're going to be losing habitat. Even though they're not endangered anymore and listed as vulnerable, there's still only 2,000 of them. They're still in fragmented populations. They're still a limited gene pool. What we're doing is critically important to ensure their survival in the future.

What do you think is the message of the film?
The fact that two cultures, two nations can work together towards conservation. You read the headlines and you know we got trade wars going on and the leaders badmouthing each other and saying awful things. Here we can be very comfortably in another country as advisers. It is a Chinese program, they're Chinese bears and it works very well. That's a message of hope that conservation can bring the countries of the world together.

An MBTA bus struggles in the snow on March 13, 2018. DEREK KOUYOUMIAN

Boston could see more spring snow later this week

Nope, winter weather isn't over just yet.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

Even in April, winter is still holding on.

Another sprinkle of spring snow could hit Massachusetts later this week, according to the National Weather Service Boston office.

The flurries could accumulate during the Friday morning commute, and though Bay Staters are used to driving in the snow, forecasters wrote that there's "some concern this'll catch folks off guard, if coming to fruition, making for Friday a.m. commute travel headaches."

Some locations across the commonwealth could see a "decent morning burst" of snow, though current predictions seem to show that Boston won't get the brunt of the wintry weather.

A Wednesday morning forecast from the weather service shows Boston expecting less than an inch of snow in total on Friday, but parts of western Massachusetts will see a bit more: Amherst could get 2 to 3 inches of snow and North Adams could see up to 6 inches.

For Boston, forecasters are putting the chance of snow on Friday morning at 70 percent. And along with that snow, of course, comes some chilly temperatures.

While Wednesday saw a high of 64 degrees, the temperature will drop into the mid-40s Thursday and fall to 28 degrees Thursday night into Friday. Friday could see a high of 44 degrees during the day and a low of 34 at night.

The snow will likely change into rain later on Friday, as well, but that's still not the end. Forecasters are warning of two periods of "potentially wintry weather" afterward, due to some Arctic air.

The weather service's seven-day forecast shows a chance of rain and snow Monday night as well, which will also see a low temp around 34 degrees.

We're still a bit too far out to be sure, though, forecasters said, but basically, don't get your hopes up for spring conditions just yet.

Students participated in the March for Our Lives on Saturday, March 24. DEREK KOUYOUMJIAN/METRO

Massachusetts students behind March for Our Lives have planned multiple town halls

The Massachusetts students who organized the recent March for Our Lives have planned another activist event: Town Hall for Our Lives.

Working with March For Our Lives Boston and Stop Handgun Violence, students have organized five town halls to take place this Saturday, April 7.

"We may not be old enough to vote; we are certainly old enough to voice our opinions," said Charlotte Lowell, an Andover High School student organizer, in a statement. "This movement will continue at the Town Hall for Our Lives, where we will learn and mobilize to create the change our classrooms and communities deserve."

State and federal legislators as well as city council members will participate in different town halls, from Rep. Katherine Clark to Somerville Mayor Joseph Curtatone to Boston city councilors Ayanna Pressley and Annissa Essaibi-George, and more.

According to the Town Hall Project, 157 members of Congress have not held an in-person town hall in more than a year, since Jan. 1, 2017. But town halls are vital to democracy, student organizers said, and especially important to their fight for gun control.

"This movement will continue at the Town Hall for Our Lives, where we will learn and mobilize to create the change our classrooms and communities deserve."

Andover High School student organizer Charlotte Lowell

"I was in the fourth grade when the Sandy Hook shooting happened. I was in the ninth grade when the Marjory Stoneman Douglas shooting happened. Since I heard about Sandy Hook, I have had a fear that this will happen to me or my little sisters. … I am tired of being afraid," said District 2 student organizer Jaylin Gemmel, of Nipmuc Regional, in a statement. "The adults that are leading this country have shown that they are not going to change. It's time to show them that it is the only option."

Town Hall events scheduled for April 7 include:

District 1: Robert Boland Library, 1350 West St, Pittsfield, 7 - 9 p.m.

District 2: Millbury Public Library- 128 Elm St, Millbury, 9:30 -11 a.m.

Districts 3 & 6: Joint town hall at the Boys and Girls Club of Greater Lowell, 657 Middlesex St, Lowell, 11 a.m.-1 p.m.

Districts 4 & 5: Joint town hall at the Kennedy Middle School at 165 Mill St, Natick, 10 a.m.-12 p.m.

District 7 & 8: Joint town hall at the Bolling Building, 2300 Washington St, Roxbury, 1:30-3:30 p.m. KRISTIN TOUSSAINT

Social-media influencer travels to make videos and change lives

Nuseir Yassin is about to complete the project that led him to become a worldwide influencer. Metro talked with him about his plans.

PABLO VENES
letters@metro.us

Nuseir Yassin is 288 videos away from completing his most ambitious goal and the one that made him rise to fame in 2017. When he completes 1,000 videos, Yassin would like to take a break to set new goals, but for the moment he is enjoying a lifestyle that he always wanted and for which he gave up his job a $120,000-a-year job at PayPal.

Since then he gets up every day with a very clear purpose: to produce a one-minute video in which at least one person's perception of life changes. He does this by traveling to a different country every week and documenting his experience in a minute of video, which he then posts on his Facebook channel, Nas Daily.

"The average life expectancy for a man in the United States is 76 years," said the young Israeli Harvard graduate. "I am 25, so I have already lived 33 percent of my life and I want to fill the remaining 67 percent of it meeting good people."

Now his income comes from consulting, sponsors and, above all, from what he posts on Facebook. Given the large number of views generated by each of his videos, on average 1 million per video, Yassin is one of the few Facebook pays for his content.

"On a good month, I can make between $100K to $200K thanks to the ads that appear in my Facebook videos," he revealed while he was meeting for the first time with his Puerto Rican followers.

Nuseir Yassin was in Puerto Rico, where he made his 708th video, "NO MORE TAXES?!" You can see it on his Facebook page, Nas Daily. METRO WORLD NEWS

Q&A

NUSEIR YASSIN
Influencer

You are at the peak of your career as an influencer, why stop at the 1,000th video?
From the beginning, I was clear that I only wanted to make 1,000 videos. It is important to evolve. This does not mean that I'll stop making videos all together; perhaps I'll make documentaries or more extensive content such as writing a book.

What three goals do you still have to fulfill?
I only have two: to change the opinion of at least one person and have a child.

You do not like being cataloged as a vlogger, why?
I do not like denominations in general. Unlike what I do, vloggers do not have a script, they go filming all day and then edit the most important part. I do have a script prepared and I have clear the message I want to make before starting to shoot.

Why Facebook instead of YouTube?
Facebook has a more personal sense of community than YouTube. On Facebook, you have the opportunity to know more about the people who follow you, their interests and their real name and even talk directly with them while on YouTube each one hides behind a profile. I am aware that if I am on YouTube I could generate more money, but I prefer millions of friends than millions of dollars.

So why did you decide to make an account on YouTube?
I don't manage that account. It's someone who pretends to be me.

Are there some issues that you prefer not to touch?
I have a hard time talking about education, animals and tourism issues. It's not that I did not want to touch those issues, because eventually I will, but I feel that they are not my forte.

You have visited more than 60 countries. Did you feel fear on any of them?
Yes. When I traveled to Jerusalem the atmosphere was very hostile; in South Africa, it was dangerous because our visit took place in the middle of a strike; and also in the Philippines because we could see the intense conflict between the Islamic State (ISIS).

Of all the videos you have produced, which is your favorite?
I have several, but the first that comes to my mind is "We Killed the Internet." This one is about the current state of the internet and the proliferation of content creators whose material is of a sexual and macho nature.

Big Papi surprises local students with free baseball caps

Red Sox legend David Ortiz made a special appearance Wednesday at the Hurley School in Boston.

MORGAN ROUSSEAU
morgan@metro.us

David "Big Papi" Ortiz surprised local kids on Wednesday morning by stopping by their school to hand out baseball hats, on the house.

The free hats were handed out to Hurley School students just in time for the Red Sox home opener on Thursday, and are part of a JetBlue initiative called Calling All Kids. The project will reportedly put 45,000 free baseball hats on the heads of students in more than 100 schools across Boston.

In addition to Ortiz, kids also got a visit from Red Sox mascot Wally as well as Boston Mayor Marty Walsh and Boston Public Schools Superintendent Tommy Chang.

The Red Sox said Calling All Kids is an "effort to connect baseball to the next generation of fans," NECN reported.

The team is scheduled to face the Tampa Bay Rays on Thursday at Fenway Park.

El Diablo TOURISMO LANZAROTE

The Canary Island you don't know

Lanzarote is your Spanish getaway without the crowds but all the amenities and culture of the mainland.

Fodor's Travel

Volcanic vineyards

In a New York Times survey of Canarian wines, nearly half of the winners hailed from Lanzarote's La Geria valley, whose black, lunar landscape yields some of the world's most distinctive volcanic wines. They taste best in situ along the LZ-30 highway: Start your bodega crawl at El Grifo (est. 1775) with local varietals sipped to the backdrop of 18th-century presses and barrels. Then zip up the road to Los Bermejos, a somm favorite, renowned for its smoky listán negro, and finally to La Florida, a mom-and-pop winery that produces the island's headiest expression of the white grape malvasía.

Artistic heritage

One of the first things you'll notice in Lanzarote is the scarcity of man-made eyesores like flashing billboards, sprawling malls, and monstrous resorts. Such is the legacy of the late artist and architect César Manrique, who railed relentlessly against speculators and developers to preserve the island's geological integrity. Get a taste of his ingenuity at Tahíche, a Bohemian crash-pad hewn into a volcanic sinkhole, or at the Jardín de Cactus, a veritable amphitheater containing 1,100 species of prickly plants.

Latin-inflected cuisine

Compared to the restrained cuisine of mainland Spain, known for minimal spicing and saucing, Canarian food makes no apologies about its pungent flavors. Mojo, a garlicky condiment spooned over grilled meats and fish, is a fixture on the Canarian table. So are papas arrugadas, "wrinkly potatoes" cooked in salt water until their flesh is dense and buttery.

Volcano-Top Dining

Here's one for the bucket list: dinner on a volcano. In the heart of Timanfaya National Park, a 19-square-mile expanse of soaring volcanic peaks and jet-black lava fields, sit down to a meal at El Diablo, a glass-enclosed aerie overlooking the Martian landscape. Try the house specialty, chicken grilled over a volcanic vent.

Europe's only underwater museum

Museo Atlántico is the brainchild of Jason deCaires Taylor, a muck-raking artist known for his politically charged exhibits. Inaugurated in 2017, his underwater museum in Playa Blanca (the only of its kind in Europe) features more than 300 thought-provoking forms including portrayals of refugees jammed into rickety boats.

Iberostar Lanzarote Park PROVIDED

Standout Accommodations

Lanzarote is home to some of the archipelago's most sought-after hotels. Travelers looking for accessible luxury and all-inclusive pampering should look no further than Iberostar Lanzarote Park, a chic yet unpretentious oceanfront property that reopened last year after major renovations.

Endless summer

With year-round temperatures that seldom dip below 65 degrees or rise above 80, Lanzarote boasts one of the most temperate climates in the world. Rainy days number around 18 a year, which means that no matter when you go, you're virtually guaranteed beach weather. Even in the depth of winter, the water is brisk but warm enough for swimming; in August, it rises to an ideal 72 degrees.

Outdoor activities

Lanzarote has such optimal weather that it can be hard to peel yourself from the poolside chaise longue, but lollygagging all day would be a mistake. Give the rental car a break and lace up your running shoes or hop on a bike to better take in the island's dramatic scenery. Complement your terrestrial training with water sports like surfing, kiteboarding, or parasailing (inquire at your hotel for bookings).

Los Hervideros

Los Hervideros ("the boilers"), situated just west of Timanfaya National Park, are a visitable series of underwater caves produced by 18th-century lava flows. Gaze down toward the surf, which splashes upward like a geyser at high tide, and you can almost imagine the cool waves colliding with rivers of screaming-hot lava — converted, today, into solid black rock.

Brandin Cooks was targeted 114 times last season by Tom Brady. GETTY IMAGES

I'll admit, I didn't see it coming. But I probably should have.

The New England Patriots traded Brandin Cooks to the Los Angeles Rams on Tuesday for a first-round pick (23rd overall) in the upcoming draft. The Pats also sent a fourth-rounder (136 overall) to the Rams while getting a sixth-rounder (198 overall) in return.

Cooks turns 25 in September. He saw the most targets on the Patriots during last year's regular season, and he finished the year with the second most receiving yards on the team, behind Rob Gronkowski.

Having already lost a wide receiver in Danny Amendola, a running back in Dion Lewis, and a left tackle in Nate Solder, it didn't feel like the Patriots were going to lose another key piece on offense this offseason.

And then, of course, Cooks was dealt to LA.

He was entering the final year of his contract, and reports say that the Patriots were trying to sign Cooks to an extension before the trade. Assuming Cooks' asking price was much higher than the value that Bill Belichick placed on him, the Patriots reacted by acquiring another first-round pick, giving them two first-rounders and two second-rounders in this month's Draft.

And before I go any further, no, I do not expect the Patriots to use those two first-rounders to trade for Odell Beckham Jr.

Now, where were we?

Understanding — and ultimately accepting — the way Belichick does business, I guess the trade shouldn't really be shocking news. That's not to say I didn't enjoy what Cooks did for the Pats in 2017. I did. And I guess it's not to say that the Patriots didn't enjoy what Cooks did for them in 2017 either. They did, or they wouldn't have tried to sign him to an extension before the trade.

Take off the Cooks jersey for a minute, and you'll realize this move is just another example of it being business as usual in Foxboro, for Belichick at least.

And like I told you several weeks ago — after the departures of Amendola, Lewis, Solder, and Malcolm Butler — seeing Belichick take a "business as usual" approach was actually refreshing, during an offseason in which the Patriot Way was being tested by some Patriots players.

By understanding the Cooks trade, Belichick's offseason approach becomes even more refreshing, especially when realizing that it means a player like Gronkowski isn't going anywhere. I never thought the Patriots were going to trade Gronkowski this offseason. And I certainly never believed for a second that Gronkowski was going to retire at the age of 28.

But now that both Cooks and Amendola are gone, there's little to no chance that Gronkowski isn't playing for the Patriots in 2018.

Now, I know what you're thinking. Yes, WrestleMania 34 is this Sunday in New Orleans. And yes, Gronkowski's good friend, Mojo Rawley is taking part in the "Andre the Giant Memorial battle Royal."

Even if Gronkowski makes an appearance, don't look for me to be panicking about his future in New England. I actually expect him to be there in some capacity. But I also expect him to be playing alongside Tom Brady, Julian Edelman, and Chris Hogan next season.

I told you that before the new league year even began. Now that Cooks has been shipped off to Los Angeles for a first-round pick, it's even more evident that I was right all along. Gronkowski isn't going anywhere.

And that makes me accept the Cooks trade even more.

Pats to trade up for NC State's Chubb?

At Metro.us we explored the possibility that the Patriots could trade up in the 2018 NFL Draft to nab stud defensive end Bradley Chubb. ESPN's Adam Schefter believes that the Patriots will do some maneuvering now that they have four draft picks in the first two rounds.

The 2018 NFL Draft will take place on April 27-28.

Bruins, Sox, Celtics all in action this weekend

April is one of those magical overlap months on the Boston sports calendar as three of the four major local teams are all in action. This weekend, the Celtics and the Bruins will both be looking to position themselves as the No. 1 seeds in their respective conferences, while the Red Sox will be playing their first games of the 2018 season at Fenway Park. Here is a preview of all the action.

Jake DeBrusk celebrates a goal against Florida earlier this season. GETTY IMAGES

Red Sox
The Red Sox will take their MLB-best 5-1 record into Thursday's home opener against the Rays. David Price (1-0, 0.00 ERA) will get the ball on Fenway Opening Day, which starts at 2:05 p.m.. The Sox will have a day off Friday but return to action at the Fens on Saturday and will hand the ball to Rick Porcello (1-0, 1.69 ERA). Hector Velazquez (1-0, 1.59 ERA) is slated to throw for the Sox in the series finale on Sunday.

Saturday's game could get messy with some snow in the forecast.

Bruins
The B's are tied with Tampa Bay for the top seed in the East but do have a game in hand. Boston plays at the Panthers Thursday night, hosts Ottawa on Saturday and has another game at the Garden Sunday against the Panthers again in the regular season finale.

By Sunday night we will know the B's first round playoff opponent — which could be any one of the following: the Maple Leafs, Flyers, Blue Jackets, Devils or the Panthers.

The day, at least, of the B's first playoff game is already set: Thursday, April 12 at the Garden.

Celtics
The C's have just four regular season games remaining before their postseason starts next weekend. They'll host the Bulls Friday night before a Sunday matinee at the Garden against lowly Atlanta.

I have lupus. Every day is different.

Battling Lupus is painful, exhausting, and can sometimes make you feel hopeless. You may have been able to do more yesterday because you didn't feel as sick as you do today.

The LILAC study is an investigational, two-part study for people with lupus erythematosus. You are being asked to consider participating in Part A of the LILAC study. Part A will evaluate the potential efficacy of an investigational medication, called BIIB059, in reducing skin disease in people with systemic lupus erythematosus (SLE) with skin activity or lupus rash. The study will also determine if your SLE disease activity is improving.

You may be able to participate in Part A of the LILAC study if you:

- Are between 18 and 75 years of age
- Have a confirmed diagnosis of SLE
- Have active skin disease caused by SLE

Other eligibility criteria may also apply. If you qualify for the study, your participation will last approximately 40 weeks and include up to 13 visits to the study site.

Aries Take the time to cultivate good relationships with your peers. How you deal with others will determine how much you get in return.

Taurus Make plans with someone you love to spend time with. Doing things with children, a friend or a loved one will bring some suggestions that will change relationships.

Gemini Personal changes at home will give you a boost. Moving things around or making room for something you enjoy doing will add to your comfort. Romance is in the stars.

Cancer Do your best to nourish important relationships. Listen and look for solutions to problems. Matters concerning older relatives should be handled with care.

Leo Get along with your peers if you want to avoid being left out. Show enthusiasm and be willing to pitch in and help so that you'll be kept in the loop as changes are being considered.

Virgo Share your ideas to receive all sorts of suggestions that will help you coordinate your plans in a timely and affordable manner. A partnership will improve your chances of success.

Libra Your desire to be loved and to keep the peace will jeopardize your success if you are constantly helping others get ahead. Make personal changes that support you.

Scorpio Get your thoughts and feelings out in the open. Now is the time to speak up and make changes that will improve personal and professional relationships.

Sagittarius Trusting someone unreliable will leave you in an awkward position. Don't share rumors, or you will end up being the one who is blamed.

Capricorn A change to the way you do things may come as a surprise to friends and relatives, but if it's in your best interest, you should trust your instincts.

Aquarius Tell someone you love exactly how you feel. Much can be accomplished if you are forthright about what you are willing to give and what you want in return.

Pisces Spice up your image and the way you embrace life, work and getting along with others. Step out of your comfort zone and show off what you have to offer. EUGENIA LAST

Buy all the furniture and mattresses you want and if the Red Sox pitch a no-hitter after July 17 everything will be FREE

This year it's not about the season, it's about ONE game!

That's why there's no better time than now to buy. Whether you're shopping for furniture, mattresses, accessories, accents, pool tables, or even outdoor furniture, everything could be FREE if the Sox pitch a no-hitter. That's right FREE! There are 64 regular season games between July 17 and October 1…and Boston only needs to pitch one no-hitter, home or away, for everyone to win free furniture and mattresses!
